THE NATION CELEBRATES LIGHT'S DIAMOND JUBILEE

commemorating seventy-five years of electrical progress since the invention of the incandescent lamp by Thomas A. Edison

October 21, 1879 • October 21, 1954

This year is the seventy-fifth anniversary of the electric industry, and it is being celebrated throughout the nation as Light's Diamond Jubilee.

It was on October 21, 1879, that, after spending what then was a fortune ($40,000), and seemingly endless years in a long series of unsuccessful experiments, Thomas A. Edison produced an incandescent lamp by passing an electric current through a carbonized cotton thread located within a vacuum.

That event marked the beginning of the electric revolution. In seventy-five years, this industry has become vitally integrated into every phase of America's economic life.

From that October day forward, human beings in modern society have increasingly, year by year, become more and more dependent upon this force known as electricity—until today it is literally true that if all the electric generators in all of the powerhouses of our country and other modern industrial nations were stopped it would be the equivalent of stopping the heartbeat which sustains the life within those nations.

We tend to take for granted the comforts and conveniences, the relief from toil and vast additions to leisure which have resulted from the explosive advance of the past half century. We are prone to forget that the plentitude and abundance which makes available to the citizens of the United States of America in the year 1954 the highest living standard known in world history did not just happen. They exist because those who created it had the freedom of opportunity and the incentive to create, plus a sense of responsibility and obligation.
